At the best, there is about as much reliability in estimates of this sort, as in calculations in

The Cincinnati Gausti estimates the growing crop to be 16,000,000 bushels of orbeat, and 75,000,000 bushels of corn. But this, of course, is pure guess work. The wheat is not yet ed, and the corn is not in tamel, notw

Indicates the makness of its defines. We did not, and do not now, charge, that the Catholic population of the country, either native or foreign, are most implicated in the sin of slave-holding, than an equal number of Protestants; hadding, than an equal number of Protestants; but we endeavored to show that the basis of Slavery and Catholicism are the same—that both are the outgrowths of the despotic princi-ple—that they are closely allied in a war upon pre-that they are closely shed in war upon the liberties of this country—that, in the defeat of either one, the power of both for mischief is crippled. These would seem to he self-evident propositions; but as the Times has the temerity to deny them, we state a few facts, not so much for its consideration as for the benefit of so much for its consideration as for the benefit of those to whom the present aspect of this Catholic question is most portentous: In the first place, then, the Catholics of the United States are, almost without exception, members of the Pro-Slavery or Democratic party. The exceptions are few and far between, and when pointed out, it is found that Catholics in the Nerth, who do not co-operate with that party, are Catholics only in name—that, though they contribute to the support of the Church and yield a show show of obedience to its ordinances, they utserly show of obedience to its ordinances, they utterly condemn the assumptions in which its ecclesicondemn the assumptions in which its ecclesiastics indulgs.

Among the many other religions seets in the country, no political unanimity can be found.
Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists, Episcopalians and all others have in communion men of all parties—of all possible shades of political faith. Cathelicism, on the contrary, is an unit.
In all the North, Gatholics, in important political contests, vote in a mass; and up to this time sheir right of suffrage has been used in supporting, defending and advancing that Southern despotism with which Catholicism is allied. These facts are indisputable; and they admit of explausition only upon the hypothesis that the masses in the interest of the Churches are controlled at the polls by their priests and bishops, who use the religious sentiment of the people to advance the political schemes in which they are engaged. If not so, why this union that is never broken—this serviced front against which argument, entreaty and exposituation are piled in vain? Why this concert of section that extends from Texas to Maine, as as through the cities and towns; as well through men of a dozen different nationalities as through the unthinking and impulsive Irish race? Has the Tases an explanation to offer.

The Times argues that our position cannot be correct, because Catholicism is an unimportant, alement in the religious world-of the South. The fact that it is there weak, and that it is powerful in the North, is proof of the truth of the general propositions with which we set out. Catholics wield the ballot in the North as well as South; and were the Catholic strength to-day substrated from the Democratic party in the Free States, the vote of those States would be ican line. That the South—the frequently hold the balance of power between the two native parties—where, as in some of our lesser cities, they are absolutely in a
